Final Website Changes

I always wanted to make a website with tiles. In my wireframe and the mock up of the Photoshop version for the website I have implemented a tile version to uniquely provide information to the user. The reason I wanted to do a tile design was because as a kid I was always exposed to that kind of style and want to know how to implement it and also it would fit with the way I was planning on to create the website. When I start to programming the website I researched on new way I can use JavaScript to organize and make the tiles interactive. This is when I found and though about implemented the tiles as the Windows 8 tile animation. That is why I changed the structure of the website by making it something little bit modern with the modern effects while keeping the old structure and roots.
